TUESDAY, JAN. 19, 1897.

Elsewhere will be found a summary of an impressive appeal to the commercial public spirit of San Francisco, made by the American Minister to Siam regarding the trade of the Pacific. This appeal will have been made in vain unless American statesmen in a majority rise above the policy of exclusion now dominating the nation. To obtain the trade of other countries, the United States will have to give them trade concessions. Beginning at the point nearest home, if San Francisco is to be made the premier entrepot for Pacific commerce, the footing American commerce has at this central station, Hawaii, must be jealously preserved. It must also be developed as an American commercial station, and that permanently under the American flag, or it will be liable to be lost to the United States for all commercial advantages.

Iconoclastic fakers who lately represented that the island of Juan Fernandez, or Robinson Crusoe's island, had disappeared have been confounded. A Chilean cruiser lately visited the island and in its report mentions a lobster packing establishment thereon. The Chilean government, moreover, is sending thirty families to Juan Fernandez as colonists and fishermen. Confiding youth has had the beautiful stories of William Tell's archery and George Washington's little hatchet spoiled cruelly, but the peerless charm of Crusoe's adventures can never be successfully assailed so long as their actual theater is left intact.

Sir Edward Clarke, an eminent Conservative statesman, advocates the granting to Ireland of £1,000,000 from the Imperial exchequer, as some compensation for the discovered over taxation of that country. A statement of the discovery was published in this paper a few days ago. Sir Edward is quoted in a speech at Plymouth as saying that, though the commission was politically a packed one in favor of Home Rule, it was a strong commission on questions relating to finance, and he thought its conclusions of fact entitled to acceptance.

Sanford Fleming, who is personally known here in connection with cable matters, is advocating the adoption of a universal time for navigators. As he was one of the prime movers in bringing about "standard" time for railways across the American continent, his advocacy of the unification of time on the seas will be highly influential. Mariners at Honolulu have for long had the benefit of daily Greenwich time given by the about halfpast one post meridian whistle.

British residents of these islands ought to be counted on for joining in the world around celebration of Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee. It is nearly time, however, that they were planning something for the occasion.

THE ORIENTAL TRADE.

Advice of a Farseeing American Diplomat to San Francisco.

The following appears as editorial in the San Francisco Call: San Francisco's opportunity to become the metropolis of the vast trade of the coasts that circle the Pacific Ocean, as well as the methods by which to lay hold of it, are pointed out in a long, urgent letter recently received by the Chamber of Commerce from John Barret, United States Minister to Siam. Mr. Barret writes not from a superficial investigation, but after mature study of the situation. He has been over the ground several times and has collected and re-collected statistics and all kinds of data bearing on the subject.

The opinion is emphatically expressed that San Francisco should be the controlling port of the entire Pacific seas, second to none in Asia, Australia or South America. The circle of trade comprehended in this vast field represents a population of 500,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 of annual business. Immense as this commerce is now it is but in its infancy and is certain to have an immense expansion.

Mr. Barret calls attention to the dimensions of the traffic already carried on; to hundreds of coasting steamers, to the dozen or more great steamship companies running steamers from Europe to the East, to the organization of British and German business in the form of great exporting and importing houses in every important city in the Orient, and to the commercial commissions sent out by European chambers of commerce to investigate every detail of demand and supply in the trade.

He singles out Shanghai as the foremost of all the great marts across the Pacific, and advises the establishment of the closest possible commercial relations with that city. He recommends that San Francisco should use its influence to establish an American chamber of commerce at Shanghai, which could act as a potent factor in assisting trade exchange. In connection with this chamber he points out there could be arranged a permanent exhibition of American products to make the Chinese familiar with American export goods, as well as to furnish American exporters all kinds of information about the needs of the Chinese markets.

It is further recommended that a San Francisco bank, with agencies in London and New York, should establish a leading branch in Shanghai, with lesser ones at other places. Capable agents should be sent to the far East to thoroughly study it, and an American steamship company, or a strongly capitalized American house acting as agent there, should have vessels of lighter draught than those crossing the Pacific, which connecting with trans-Pacific lines would carry the trade of the smaller Oriental ports. The establishment of something in this City which might be called an Oriental Exchange is suggested, where could be exhibited samples of all kinds of merchandise imported from Eastern Asia, with data as to prices and consumption.

In regard to what the Nation should do in this connection, Mr. Barret testifies, as the result of his study of the commerce of the world, to the necessity of Government subsidies to foster the building up of a proper merchant marine to make sure our commercial prosperity; just as the great commercial nations of England, France and Germany are doing.

This communication from Mr. Barret should set the merchants of the City to work to carry out that part of the programme assigned to them, and the whole coast should unite in the effort to influence National legislation to foster the creation of a great merchant marine that would make Old Glory a familiar sight in all the world's great ports. These things united with the needed reforms in lessening the excessive charges incurred in landing cargoes here would bring and send through the Golden Gate cargoes so frequent and so richly freighted as to start San Francisco upon that career of prosperity which will secure to her the proud position of the metropolis of the Pacific Ocean.

BRITISH FOREIGN POLICY.

Characterized as a Sort of Happy-Go-Lucky Optimism.

London, January 2.—Most of the newspapers in reviewing the events of 1896, criticize the happy-go-lucky optimism of Great Britain's foreign policy, as evidenced by the little effect it produced during the numerous menacing storms which have marked the year. They cite that the Venezuela trouble was immediately followed by the Transvaal dispute, and then came the insult of Emperor William in his dispatch to President Krueger and the isolation of Great Britain in the eastern question.

The newspapers, therefore, insist that the foreign policy of Great Britain is behind the times and requires to take existing facts considerably more into account, or it may expect indefinite repetitions of loss of prestige, brought about by taking up a stand which, later, it is compelled to abandon owing to miscalculations of Great Britain's means of asserting her resistance to the opposition of other powers.

The St. James Gazette makes special reference to Venezuela, and says: "If it is right now to arbitrate on the terms arranged by the United States, it was right to do so a year and a half ago, when Lord Salisbury emphatically refused Secretary Olney's demand."

Continuing, the St. James Gazette asks why the marquis of Salisbury created "an impasse from which we could not escape without war or surrender. We took surrender."

In conclusion, the St. James Gazette remarks: "With no aggression or ambitious designs upon our part, we have been within a measurable distance in a single year of war with Russia, Germany, America and the Transvaal. With a few additional warships and cruisers, some thousands more trained seamen and stokers and an army capable of sending three corps with artillery and transport, say to Canada, or Constantinople, we could face such a combination with much better confidence."

SEVEN WAITERS COMBINE.

The readers took position in turn upon the stage, which had been fitted and decorated as a drawing room by Miss McGrew. With tapestry on its rear wall, festoons of maize vine for cornices, and potted palms and ferns well disposed, the effect was delightful.

Among those present were President and Mrs. Dole, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hall, Dr. and Mrs. C. M. Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Dillingham, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Parke, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Graham, Mr. and Mrs. E. Found!

A BULLETIN representative returning home from a social event last night was halted by a guttural salutation from a Chinaman in the rear. Upon turning round he was confronted by the Chinaman, who extended what appeared to be a large and glittering deadly weapon. "Yis b'long you?" was asked instead of "You'll money [I] or you'll life!" The peaceful scribe handled the proffered weapon and found it to be a rotary eggbeater. It was brand new, but not having the ticket of any dealer attached, was not adaptable for a free puff to any of our advertisers. The Chinaman was sent on his way rejoicing with the assurance that he had found something "good allee same cookee custard." As the finder had often cussed hard, doubtless, while doing it with a spoon, he had taken on a smile that was childlike and bland when shown how easy it was to turn the crank—no reference is allowed here to turning the scribe round from the strait and rugged side path of Lunalilo street.
